

Excerpt 3, Volume II, Chaos - The third sketch from the second volume is again provocative as it makes use of the inappropriateness of the chosen time period:

While events are taking place across worlds, the causes of which have no direct origin in the place where they are happening, we find ourselves in a time approximately thirty years before – a time when this recording of This is not a Love Song, exclusively taken by Moshcam in Sydney and published on April 11, 2013, was not yet available.

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=be0rGkKxSGU>.

But in line with the theory of the expanding universe, we find ourselves in Prague and the year is 1982. At that time, the world seemed the same as the day before it or any other day for that matter ... but something was different. Specifically, it was November 15th, 1982 and the mandatory mourning was spreading over the country like a thick fog. Smart woke up to an otherwise rainy, humdrum morning, but from the very first clear moment he felt something in the air. Everything around him was waterlogged and saturated with strange information like a sponge.

Actually, the official explanation of the following events was made somewhat differently. The whole report was officially given on November 11th simultaneously on radio and television. "We announce to the Party and the whole of the Soviet people with deep sorrow that, on November 10th, 1982 at 8:30am Moscow Time, the General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union Leonid Ilyich Brezhnev has unexpectedly passed away". The message was written in the Czechoslovak "Red Right" newspaper. However, this official message was only a confirmation of the generally known fact that another one of them had kicked the bucket.

End of excerpt 3